Ceramic Exports from Scotland: 1806-1810

Introduction

The Clyde Commercial Advertizer, from which these tables were drawn by Mr. Gerard Quail, with the assistance of Ernest M. Brown and Marion McFarlane, is a rich source of British, and especially Scottish, economic history. It was a typical period newspaper, set in 6-point type and difficult to read, but it contained lists of all arriving and departing shipping, by port, together with their cargos and destinations. Here is a sample entry:

> Exports from Port-Glasgow
> June 13 (1808). Maid of the Mill, Russel, to Newfoundland, with 35 chalders coals, 90 barrels pork, 100 casks butter, 13 boxes, 4 bales, 1 trunk, 25 casks, 10 crates, 5 jars, and 33 kegs, con. 1700 lbs. earthenware, 514 lbs. crown glass, 120 dozen bottles, 700 lbs. tinware, 6 doz. paint brushes, 26 cwt nails, 600 lbs. shoes, 8.0.9. refined sugar in lumps. 14.3.8. do. in loaves, 400 lbs stationery, 12 doz. hats, 14 yards printed cottons, 1104 yards cotton cloth, 204 yards Irish bounty linen, 1642 yards British printed bounty cottons, 795 lbs unwrought leather, and loose 24 pots, 36 frying pans, 4 fifty six weights, 24 tea kettles, 12 goblets with covers, 12 skillets with covers, by Alex. Miller and Co. owners of the vessel - 5 boxes con. 251 dozen leather caps by Archd. Newall.
> (Clyde Commercial Advertizer, 22 June 1808)

Mr. Quail's interest in these lists arose from his desire to know the destinations of the wares of specific Scottish factories. The Delftfield Pottery in Glasgow, for example, began to export tin-glazed earthenware to the colonial market from the date of its establishment in 1747 (largely with profits from the Virginia tobacco trade), and was still doing so as late as 1810 (G. Quail to L. Sussman 1978: pers. com.).

North Americans, on the other hand, are more interested in the origin of the wares found here, and these tables provide no little insight into this problem. The continuous stream of Queensware, or creamware, in relatively large quantities, for example, indicates that some of what we regard now as being English creamware may indeed be of Scottish origin. "Cream-coloured earthenware, or Queensware, was first introduced to Glasgow at Thomson & Robertsons Pottery in 1770 by a group of Staffordshire potters led by Robert Bagnell. Both this Company and their rival the Delftfield Company, from 1772 exported creamware to the colonial market."

(G. Quail to L. Sussman 1878: pers. com.).

Unfortunately, one cannot assume that every brick, pipe and plate mentioned in these tables is of Scottish manufacture. In the Clyde Commercial Advertizer, 30 April 1806,

> THE DELFTFIELD COMPANY
> Beg s leave to acquaint the Public, that, in addition to their usual extensive assortment of POTTERY OF THEIR OWN MANUFACTURE, in which they have of late made considerable improvements, they have, at present, FOR SALE, a great variety of TABLE SETS of BLUE and WHITE and of ENAMELLED WARE, of the best quality and patterns, together with CHINA TEA SETS, and OTHER ARTICLES, which, from their connexion with some of the principal Houses in STAFFORDSHIRE, they are enabled to sell at the lowest prices, and which they flatter themselves will be found deserving of attention.
> Orders for exportation, as usual, will be attended to, and the greatest care taken in packing, by applying to William Young, at the works, who will also supply on the best terms, any orders to be shipped from Liverpool.
> Glasgow, April, 1806.

The business practices of the nineteenth century could be every bit as complicated as those of the twentieth, but this does not negate the fact that the vast majority of the ceramic shipped from Scottish ports must have had a Scottish manufacturing provenance. Indeed the modest trade documented in these lists proves to be the basis of the large export boom which developed in the Glasgow factories in the 1850s.

Even in this period the Scottish factories are competing on almost an Empire scale with their commercial rivals in England.

The following lists are divided into five columns. From left to right they give the date of departure of the ship, the goods shipped, the port of departure, the destination and the owner of the cargo or exporter. The companies and individuals listed in this final column are, in the newspaper, given five different designations. They are either "owners of the ship", "agents for the vessel", "agents for a person residing abroad", or "master". Frequently they are given no title. Except where a (‡) appears to designate the owner of the vessel or the master is noted, no systematic attempt has been made by the compilers to document these differences, indeed, for much of the year 1808, the exporter's names are missing from the original MS. Also missing are the names and registeries of the vessels, although they appear in the Advertizer. These omissions are unfortunate, but not, except for the year 1808, crucial. Those interested in the differences between speculative export and the filling of orders will want to consult the commercial newspapers for themselves in any case.

The names of the exporters are, however, important, because it is these names which provide, in the majority of the cases, the tangible link between the continents. The business records of importers are likely to have entries like: "Purchased from Alex. Miller & Co. - 1700 lbs. earthenware". Such entries are of little help unless one can identify Alex. Miller.

It will be noted that the ceramic trade during these years is largely with the West Indies, although eastern Canada, especially Newfoundland, and the southern U.S. are also receiving Scottish ceramic. One wonders, however, if places like Tortola, Grenada, St. Thomas and Demerara are capable of consuming such quantities of earthenware, or whether these cargos form the basis of a further carrying trade, perhaps to Latin America. The latter appears more probable. (North American readers should not assume that the St. John's mentioned in the lists refers to the Newfoundland or New Brunswick ports. The main port of Antigua is also named St. John's.)

Shipping lists such as these provide the vital link between the British producer and the North American consumer. There are, of course, jobbers and merchants as well between those two extremes, but their records are frequently still extant in the form of day books, journals and account books. For generally unmarked wares such as those of the early nineteenth century, these connections are important. The big step, however, between Europe and North America is across the Atlantic Ocean, and the records of the carrying trade provide the bridge.

N° 239 Janvier 1986

Exportations des céramiques de l'Écosse: 1806-1810

Introduction

Le Clyde Commercial Advertizer d'où ces tableaux ont été tirés par M. Gerard Quail avec l'aide d'Ernest M. Brown et Marion McFarlane constitue une source fertile de renseignements sur l'histoire économique britannique, et plus particulièrement écossaise. Il s'agit d'un journal caractéristique de l'époque, composé en six points et difficile à lire mais contenant les listes de tous les navires qui arrivaient dans un port et en partaient, leur cargaison et leur destination. Par exemple, on pouvait y lire:

> Exportations de Port Glasgow
> 13 juin (1808). Maid of the Mill, Russel, à Terre-Neuve, avec 35 fois 72 boisseaux de charbon, 90 barriques de porc, 100 barriques de beurre, 13 caisses, 4 ballots, 1 malle, 25 barriques, 10 cageots, 5 jarres et 33 caques contenant 1700 livres de poterie, 514 livres de crown-glass, 120 douzaines de bouteilles, 700 livres de ferblanterie, 6 douzaines de pinceaux, 26 fois cent livres de clous, 600 livres de chaussures, 8.0.9 de sucre raffiné en morceaux, 14.3.8 de sucre en pain, 400 livres de papeterie, 12 douzaines de chapeaux, 14 verges de cotonnades imprimées, 1104 verges de toile de coton, 204 verges de toile d'Irlande (subventionnée), 1642 verges de coton imprimé (subventionné), 795 livres de cuir vert; et non empaquetés, 24 casseroles, 36 poêles à frire, 4 poids de 56 livres, 24 bouilloires pour le thé, 12 gobelets avec couvercle, 12 poêlons avec couvercle, par Alex. Miller and Co., armateurs - 5 caisses contenant 251 douzaines de casquettes de cuir par Archd. Newall.
> (Clyde Commercial Advertizer, 22 juin 1808)

L'intérêt de M. Quail pour ces listes est né de sa curiosité de connaître la destination des marchandises expédiées par des manufactures écossaises déterminées. Par exemple, la société Delftfield Pottery de Glasgow a commencé dès sa fondation en 1747 à exporter des faïences sur le marché colonial (en grande partie avec les profits du commerce de tabac de Virginie) et continuait toujours ses exportations en 1818 (G. Quail à L. Sussman 1978: communication personnelle).

Mais comme les Nord-Américains s'intéressent davantage à l'origine des articles fabriqués mis au jour sur place, ces tableaux n'apportent pas beaucoup de lumière sur la question. Ainsi, l'arrivée constante en quantité assez abondante de queensware ou de creamware indique que ce que nous considérons à l'heure actuelle comme du creamware anglais pourrait bien en fait être d'origine écossaise. "La poterie de couleur crème, ou la poterie queensware, a d'abord été introduite en 1770 chez Thomson & Robertsons Pottery de Glasgow par un groupe de potiers du Staffordshire ayant à sa tête Robert Bagnell. À partir de 1772, cette compagnie de même que sa rivale la Delftfield Company ont fait l'exportation de creamware sur le marché colonial." (G. Quail à L. Sussman 1978: communication personnelle).

Malheureusement, on ne saurait affirmer que chaque brique, pipe et assiette mentionnées dans ces tableaux soient de fabrication écossaise. Dans le numéro du 30 avril 1806 du Clyde Commercial Advertizer, > sollicite l'honneur d'informer le public qu'en plus de son grand choix habituel de POTERIES DE SA PROPRE FABRIQUE, lequel s'est considérablement amélioré ces derniers temps, elle offre EN VENTE, une grande variété de SERVICE DE TABLE en POTERIE BLEU, BLANCHE et ÉMAILLÉE, de la meilleure qualité et avec les plus jolis motifs, des SERVICES À THÉ et D'AUTRES ARTICLES que, grace à ses relations d'affaires avec certains des principaux fournisseurs du STAFFORDSHIRE, la compagnie est à même de vendre aux prix les plus bas, et qu'elle considère comme extrêmement avantageux.

> LA DELFTFIELD COMPANY
> Pour l'exécution des commandes à l'exportation, s'adresser à William Young de l'atelier, qui veillera à ce que l'emballage soit fait avec le plus grand soin et assurera également les meilleures conditions pour toutes les commandes livrées à partir de Liverpool.
> Glasgow, avril 1806

Les pratiques commerciales du XIX^{e} siècle peuvent avoir été tout aussi compliquées que celles du XX^{e} siècle, mais cette constatation n'informe en rien le fait que la plus grande majorité des céramiques expédiées des ports écossais ont dû être fabriquées en Écosse. En fait, le modeste commerce révélé par ces listes semble avoir été le point de départ de l'essor considérable que les fabricants de Glasgow ont connu au cours des années 1850 dans le domaine de l'exportation.

Même au cours de cette période, les manufactures écossaises font concurrence presque dans tout l'Empire à leurs rivaux commerciaux anglais.

Les listes suivantes sont réparties sur cinq colonnes. De gauche à droite elles indiquent la date de départ du navire, les marchandises expédiées, le port de partance, la destination et le nom du propriétaire de la cargaison ou de l'exportateur. Les sociétés et les individus inscrits dans la dernière colonne sont, d'après le journal, désignés sous cinq appellations différentes. Ils sont soit "armateurs", "agents maritimes", "représentants d'une personne vivant à l'étranger" ou "capitaines". Souvent, ils n'ont aucun titre. Sauf lorsqu'une astérisque (*) apparaît pour désigner l'armateur ou lorsque le capitaine est mentionné, les compilateurs n'ont à vrai dire fait aucune tentative systématique pour combler ces lacunes, étant donné que pour une bonne partie de l'année 1808 le nom des exportateurs ne figure pas sur le manifeste original. Le nom et l'inscription des navires manquent également quoiqu'ils apparaissent dans l'Advertizer. Ces omissions, bien que déplorables, ne sont pas cruciales, si ce n'est pour l'année 1808. De toute manière, les personnes qui s'intéressent aux différences entre la théorie et la réalité voudront consulter elles-mêmes les journaux commerciaux.

Toutefois, le nom des exportateurs a son importance parce que c'est lui qui, dans la majorité des cas, constitue le lien tangible entre les continents. Il est probable que les registres d'affaires des importateurs contiennent des indications du genre: "acheté à Alex. Miller & Co. - 1700 livres de poterie". Ces renseignements ne sont pas d'une grande utilité à moins de pouvoir identifier le dénommé Alex. Miller.

Il convient de faire remarquer que le commerce des céramiques pendant cette période se fait en grande partie avec les Indes Occidentales, quoique l'est du Canada, notamment Terre-Neuve, et le sud-est est États-Unis reçoivent également des céramiques écossaises. Néanmoins, on se demande si dans des lieux comme Tortola, Grenade, Saint-Thomas et Demerara il était possible de consommer de telles quantités de poterie, à moins que ces cargaisons n'aient formé la base d'un autre transport de marchandises, par exemple vers l'Amérique latine. Cette dernière hypothèse semble la plus probable. (Le lecteur nord-américain ne doit pas croire que le St. John's mentionné dans les listes renvoie aux ports de Terre-Neuve ou du Nouveau-Brunswick. Le port principal d'Antigua porte également le nom de St. John's).

Des connaissements comme ceux-ci constituent le lien vital entre le producteur britannique et le consommateur nord-américain. Bien sûr, il existe entre ces deux extrêmes des intermédiaires et des commerçants, mais leurs registres subsistent encore souvent sous la forme de mains courantes et de livres de comptes. Ces repères sont importants dans le cas des articles généralement non marqués comme ceux du début du XIX^{e} siècle. Mais le fossé immense que constitue l'océan Atlantique entre l'Europe et l'Amérique du Nord peut être comblé par les registres des transports de marchandises.
